

Cable trays are unsightly

AI Overview

Cable trays don't have to be an eyesore; with the right design and placement, they can be discreetly integrated into your workspace or home.

Under-Desk and Furniture Integration

Mounting cable trays under desks or behind furniture is one of the most effective ways to hide cables. Clamp-style trays attach to the edge of a desk without drilling, keeping wires off the floor and out of sight while supporting power strips and adapters securely . Choosing trays in metallic finishes or colors that match your furniture helps them blend seamlessly into the environment . Some desks and TV stands even come with built-in cable management compartments, eliminating the need for additional trays .

Cable Organizers and Accessories

Using cable organizers, dividers, and clips inside trays can separate power, data, and control cables, reducing clutter and preventing tangling . This not only improves aesthetics but also lowers electromagnetic interference and makes maintenance easier. For cables running along walls or floors, paintable raceways or cord covers can make them virtually invisible while maintaining accessibility .

Decorative Solutions

For areas where cables are visible, consider decorative boxes or baskets to conceal power strips and excess cable length. Options like wicker baskets or fabric-covered...
